2004 HICE draws more than 1,000 participants

More that 1,000 education academicians and professionals from more than 40 countries participated in the 2004 Hawaii International Conference on Education. Responses from participants are often enthusiastic.

Efrain Davis, CAECE University in Argentina, relates his experience briefly. "I believe one word could summarize it all: Great!"

"The colleagues I met were very kind and ready to share their experiences. I learned quite a number of things and hope I managed to give an idea of what we are doing in my country as regards teaching and teacher education," he adds.

"I really enjoyed the conference as well as my stay in Hawaii," says Guy Tchibozo of IUFM in France. "The organization of the conference was particularly great, and both the place and stay were a very nice experience for me."

Anita Pipere of Daugavpils University in Latvia notes that Hawaii provided a "stunning summer in between of dull Eastern European winter."

She adds, "It afforded the possibility to take a quick view on the latest advances in educational affairs, mainly in the U.S., but also in other countries. For one used more to the conferences in Europe, this is quite the different perspective. Conclusion: we can learn very much from each other. We just need to know each other better."

Norhayati Mahyuddin of the University of Malaya in Malaysia says he had "an awesome time in Hawaii and I'm just so thrilled to be in such an integral part of such a wonderful organization."

"My favorite part was meeting everyone and talking to amazing groups of people," he adds. "For the presentations, I thought they were all so good. The stay in Hawaii was fantastic and it will always be treasured in my mind."

Benita Bowles of the Catholic Education Office of Melbourne in Australia says;

“Still Standing in the Schoolhouse Doors,” was the title of the keynote address delivered by Dr. Jacqueline Jordan Irvine of Emory University. While relating the theme to the Supreme Court decision, Brown vs. the Board of Education, Dr. Irvine also connected the theme to the current “No Child Left Behind” initiative.

“The most effective teachers are found in schools where they are needed the least,” Dr. Irvine told participants, noting that the two challenges must be faced. They include convincing policy makers to act on behalf of other people’s children, and that we “will not and cannot achieve our vision with children with broken promises and broken dreams,” she said.

A prolific author in the field of education, Dr. Irvine specializes in multicultural education and urban teacher education.

She has received numerous awards, including the Distinguished Career Award from the Special Interest Group on Black Education of the American Education Research Association, and the Thomas Jefferson award, the highest award given to an Emory University faculty member for service and research.

both the conference and of the state itself were memorable to say the least. Given the fact that this was the first International conference I had presented to, I arrived with some trepidation about how this presentation may be received. However, the responses from the wide range of people who attended this forum were positive, encouraging and welcoming.”

Min-Pyng Chen of the National Institute of Education in Singapore says she gained a great deal of information from the poster sessions. “They were informal and I felt that I could ask the questions that I really wanted to ask.”

Judith Elizabeth Brown of Central Queensland University in Australia says she “had a wonderful time in Hawaii and found everyone both at the conference and at all the other places extremely friendly and helpful.”

She added, “The conference was very varied and gave me ample scope to follow my own lines of interest. After the conference, we had a day or two on the Big Island, Hawaii and that was one of the highlights of the trip – going to the Volcanoes National Park.”

David Campos of the University of the Incarnate Word in Texas says he attended “some fascinating lectures, met new international colleagues, and connected with friends from the past. It’s professional development and a winter get-away rolled up in one.” W
